

Our philosophy of care

For 135 years, The Lutheran Care Network has been caring for senior residents, either in one of our 11 facilities, or in the comfort of their own homes.

We have a long, rich history and a trusted relationship with many families. We don't take any of this for granted. We understand that quality care and respect for people are first and foremost, especially today as the paradigm of senior care is changing. With senior citizens living longer, healthier lives, the need for services that meet their new requirements for care will grow. At the same time, we understand that families, already busy with jobs, children, and lives of their own, want the gold standard in care for their loved ones, without worry. We understand that families are busy, and want to work with an organization that cares about their needs, too, and respects their commitments and time.

TLCN staff is committed to quality care, including respect for an individual's physical, emotional and spiritual needs. The well-being of senior citizens come first – before any bottom line, insurance reimbursement, ability to pay, or morass of paperwork.

As a church-affiliated organization, we're not in the business of warehousing seniors. Because of that, many of our residents are living more capable lives at older ages. And because we are a network, our residents can grow with us and age in place. We're there as they need us.

A ministry of the Lutheran Church, we strive to treat people with the care and concern taught by the Judeo-Christian traditions we uphold. Although Lutheran is in our name, people of all faiths can call us home. We are happy to serve people of all faith traditions in our residences and programs.

We view eldercare as good stewardship of our valuable senior citizens, and are proud of our faith-based tradition of care.

We are the new TLC Network.
